my friend posted on social media saying she had a cold. When I called her, she said she was fine. I saw her on my friend's chat with another girl in a cafe on Saturday afternoon. How stupid I was! My friend's "illness" was a complete lie! Instead of recovering at home, she was out having fun with someone else.

I was so angry that I avoided her during school all day, and I still don't feel like responding to any of her online messages. The stress of this situation is killing me, and I'm at a loss what to do next.

I definitely understand how you feel. I also had a friend whom I trusted a lot. When I found out that I was tricked by him, I was really hurt and let go of our friendship. I know you value your friendship and want your friend to value it equally. However, if your friend ignores your feelings or makes you suffer, it's time to rethink your relationship. Talk to her and decide whether this friendship is still important to you. It's sad to move on, but you have to accept that friends come and go in life.
